NOTES

Material: HDPE, PE4710 / PE100

Selection of Fitting End Thicknesses: When selecting fittings, best practice to maximize joint life is to match a fitting's end thicknesses to the thickness of the pipe to which it is to be butt fused. Mismatching of thicknesses at butt fusion joints (even a one SDR difference) will always reduce the life of the butt fusion joint from what it might have been. It is not possible to determine the amount of the life reduction. The minimal savings achieved by allowing mismatched joints in a "high duty" system like a golf course irrigation system is a false economy. Some PE industry companies suggest that butt fusions with one SDR difference is without consequence, and that the ASTM butt fusion procedure confirms this position. These companies are mistaken on both accounts. The short term tests they represent to prove their position are invalid because the failure mode is invalid. Call Harco Fittings LLC for fittings with end thicknesses not found in this price list

Bolts in these accessory kits are sized to work with DR11 Flange Adapters and ductile iron DR11 Back Up Rings supplied by Harco. Flange Adapters and Back Up Rings made by others, other DR's, and Back Up Rings made of other materials may or may not work properly. This is because of the potential for different dimensions in the components and their stack up relative to the length of the bolts and the positioning of the bolt thread length. A bolt can be too long in that the thread section is out of position.

The "Pressure Class" is the rating of the pipe line for which the fitting by convention is intended for use. The Pressure Class of the fittings that of pipe that is 1 SDR thinner than the Body DR or the Pressure Class of the End DR, whichever is the lower pressure rating. Recent PPI research indicates that the convention for rating Tee's (1 DR thinner than the Body DR) is likely to change to 2 DR's thinner. In this new convention the Body DR will have to be DR9 to achieve a 160 psi pressure class.
